"Mrs." is the abbreviation of "missus" and refers to married women. "Ms." came about in the 1950s as women sought to differentiate themselves from being known by their marital status, and it gained in stature in the 1970s. Today, it's more common to refer to a woman as "Ms." regardless of her marital status.

"Miss" denoted an unmarried woman while "Mrs."—the abbreviation for "missus"—applied to married women. Women then moved back toward a less-identifying term once again, adopting "Ms." to include all adult women regardless of marital status.

~~Mrs.~~ Wikipedia

The feminist Lucy Stone (1818–1893) made a national issue of a married woman's right to keep her own surname (as she herself did upon marriage) as part of her efforts for women's rights in the U.S. Because of her, women who choose not to use their husbands' surnames have been called "Lucy Stoners".

Unlike "Miss" or "Mrs.", it doesn't indicate a woman's marital status. The title became popular during the women's movement of the 1970s because "Ms." seemed a suitable equivalent of "Mister," a title of respect for both unmarried and married men.
